

Is believed street car men will be the next to demand a shorter workday, all over the country.

Machinists already have the eight-hour day in many localities—especially where huge munitions orders are speeding up the factories—but they will continue the fight wherever their demands are still to be won.

The American Federation of Labor is behind this newest and greatest campaign!

"We aren't planning to wreck American industries," says Hugh Frayne, the A. F. L.'s New York organizer. "We are trying to make this a campaign of publicity and education. But we are going to stick to the fight until the eight-hour day and one day's rest in seven are universal in this country!"

Frayne thus outlines the situation in the following industries:

Steel.—After the Youngstown strike 1,500 unskilled men have joined the union in that city. In the independent steel companies skilled labor is already partly organized. But in the trust, a great fight is still to be made for the union, among skilled and unskilled men.

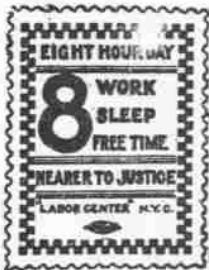

Sugar.—There is slight organization in this industry, and a recent strike at the Havermeier plant in Brooklyn won a reduction in hours; but the organization of employees is far from complete, and work among them is to be pressed.

Street Railway Men.—There are close to 25,000 unorganized in New York, and in many other cities conditions are similar, with hours running often much over ten. "They will all have the eight hour day yet," exclaimed Frayne.

Shipyards.—Work of organization is in full swing among workers in this industry, and the struggle for shorter hours will be made as soon as possible.

Other workers among whom a special effort will be made this spring toward organization are telephone girls, school teachers, semi-skilled labor in factories, firemen, florists and gardeners.

MORALS INSPECTOR HANNA TO DEMAND SHOW-DOWN

Charges against Morals Inspector Hanna, recently suspended by Chief Healey for the second time, have not yet been filed before the civil service com'n.

Hanna has been asked to see the mayor. He had an appointment for 12 o'clock yesterday. Charles Fitzmorris, Mayor Thompson's secretary, denied that he had an appointment.

If Hanna goes to trial before the civil service commission many startling developments are expected. He is expected to call in the chief and Major Funkhouser to explain the work his office has accomplished and just what became of this work which goes in the shape of secret reports to Chief Healey's office.

Judge Uhlir hints that these reports are never acted upon. He favored bringing out these facts before his court, but City Prosecutor Miller has prevented an open hearing so far.

American manufacturers of musical instruments, with an annual output valued at about $100,000,000, export only $300,000 worth annually to foreign countries.

There may be reasons for putting girls' pictures on magazine covers; but we can't think of any now.
